Escalation Policy

When to escalate

Escalate when the account cannot be found, when no permitted action fits the situation, when a step fails twice, when policies disagree, or when the customer asks for a person.

What a handoff contains

Every escalation carries the customer's description, what was checked, what was tried, what failed, and what the customer already confirmed, so the customer never repeats themselves.

Contact options

When a customer asks for a person, offer both options: a callback request or an email follow-up (demonstration contact details only in this synthetic environment). Each creates a tracked case record with an owner queue.

When an escalation exists

An escalation exists only after the system confirms that the tracked record was created. Before that, tell the customer that the request has not been created yet. Never invent a reference number, a callback time or a delivery time, and describe an email as sent only after a mail provider accepted it.
